Open your eyes, Ginny, OPEN,OPEN, open your eyes!

—I tried. Pull the plug.

reply 11 07/29/2008

Ambulance? Come on, girls (and token gay), let's waddle on over and gawk at the paramedics!!!

—Good thing I wore my sexy floral culottes today!

reply 12 07/29/2008

Ginny, RUN from the light. RUN!

—Anonymous

Update: She's being admitted to the hospital.

Can we all troop over there after work and visit her? I'm going to take some time off this afternoon for a personal visit, since we always had such a close connection. I'm sure Mr. McWhorter won't mind me doing it on office time. After all, the visit is office-related, isn't it?

—Anonymous

Maybe they can fix her wonky eye while she's in there.

That thing keeps me awake at night.

—Anonymous

reply 15 07/29/2008

"Ginny, RUN from the light. RUN!"

1986 was a long time ago, [R13].

reply 19 07/29/2008

Do you remember the potato sack race at the company picnic, damn near had to sew two sacks together to get Ginny to fit. Even then, she kinda rolled around across the line. Listen to me, I am talking like Ginny is dead.

—Wanda from Maintenance

reply 20 07/29/2008

The ambulance whisked her away a little while ago. Dana in Accounts Receivable is throwing around the "T" word..."Terrorism." She claimed she saw some mysterious white powder in the kitchen area. Glenda said it was probably from the box of Krispy Kremes that was in the kitchen, but who knows? The office is in mayhem. Everyone is terrified. Suzanne has called for a meeting at 11 to keep us all up to date. Gail is Accounts Payable told me that Ginny looked pale this morning and didn't down her usual breakfast. Arlene, her friend in Billing, said that Ginny was vomitting a 1/2 hour before she collapsed. Dear god in heaven!

—OP

Did you see the way Myrna and that female paramedic kept looking at each other? What are they looking for, ways to make those uniforms fit better?

—Helene from the switchboard

LOL!

I love you OP.

—Anonymous

I don't mean to be petty in a time like this, but I want to point out that company policy was not followed in the moments after Ginny's collapse.

Please refer to your handbook (Tab 7). You will see that a member of management (VP or above) and HR should have been notified about the incident prior to or contemporaneous with the calling of 911. Also, facilities should have been made aware at some point. Finally, the Incident Report should have been signed by everyone who was around Ginny or who first responded.

Process and Documentation people! It makes our lives easier in times of stress and/or crisis.

—Fergus Fleming, C.O.O.

reply 24 07/29/2008

(in the back of the ambulance)OK, Ginny, you can open your eyes now. I know you can hear me. I see your eyelids fluttering. rolls eyes

Who's taking lunch orders for today? I'm in the mood for Chinese.

—Frida in Legal

reply 32 07/29/2008

This is why I asked my doctor for Cipro immediately after 9/11. First it's the WTC then it's offices in Des Moines!

—Rita in Des Moines

Of course, this follows Ginny's infamous slip-and-fall incident last summer in which she was walking across the carpet. That was also before her very odd and sudden self-diagnosed "minor stroke", suspiciously after being told her work load would increase slightly due to the new billing system; and let's not forget her dramatic email, on company letterhead no less that she had been diagnosed with fibromyalgia (via WebMD) and was now entering "the sunset of my life" and asked for our prayers and support as she would "slowly begin to lose concentration on work" thus needing the support and assistance of her "dear and understanding" colleagues. And it was only last month her carpel tunnel "pain syndrome" allegedly began affecting her ability to make her daily collection calls, thus requiring the need for her temporary assistant because it was just too painful for her: Remember, she had to begin taking those mid afternoon, post lunchtime 45-minute breaks, required by her doctors so that the company wouldn't be libel for her "worsening state"?

Oh, and there was her legendary Restless Leg Syndrome attack which took place just as year-end auditing and a week of 10-hour work days ensued.......

Poor Ginny

—Ava in Accounts Payable

reply 38 07/29/2008

Her valiums are safe! I took them before the EMTs arrived. EMTs are known to be drug fanatics.

I saw that movie with Nicholas Cage - the one after 'Valley Girl' where he was serious? Anyway, he was doing more drugs than a CVS.

I wonder if Ginny has an addiction? Insurance won't pay for anything like '28 days', but I'm sure she could meet a lot of new people if she started now.

You know, Ginny won't be able to go with to the Fondue Hut if she's a junkie. They bathe all that cheese in booze. I think that's why Ginny is always anxious to go with.

Ooooh, I wonder if she's been drinking listerine? Her breath smells so mediciny lately. Wow! She could get on INTERVENTION! Such a sad show.

I came in late and just heard the news about Ginny. We had another hooker bust at my trailer park this morning. That's the third one this week! Would forming a prayer circle help?

—That''s Kathy with a "K"

reply 47 07/29/2008

I think those bills and statements are safe MaryBeth/[R46]. She's got them tucked under her pile of ketchup and mayo packets which are also under her box of heavy flow feminine liners, all those loose peanut M&Ms the the moist and sweaty pastry she hoarded from the kitchen this morning.

No siree, those bills will never be found.

Hi all. Back from the meeting. The start of the meeting was delayed. The delivery guy from the Bagel Bin forgot to include the cream cheese and lox that Lois and Bertha just love in the spread pre-ordered for the meeting.

We don't know much right now. What we do know is this: Ginny's in stable condition at the hospital. Her husband Pat was called away from the construction site and is by her side. The cops are here, and the buiding is in lock down. Glenda said that Ginny got sick 1/2-way through the stack of pancakes of the grand slam breakfast from Denny's that she had picked up earlier. The cops had suspected poisonging, and wanted to scoop up the remains of her breakfast as evidence, but Bertha said that there was no need for that: she finished Ginny's breakfast...the remaining pancakes, the sausages, and biscuits...after Ginny collapsed, and she hasn't gotten sick. Terrorism has also been ruled out. The cops had examined the white powder, but couldn't conclude what it was. Bobbie, a donut expert, volunteered to taste it. Her expertise paid off, and she comfirmed that it came off the box of donuts that had been in the kitchen earlier on. Just by tasting the powder, she was able to specify the type of donut, whether or not it was filled with jelly, and the exact time it was baked (5:36 am). The cops are talking to everyone. Everyone's in a panic. Gert's IBS is acting up and she's afraid that the cops will misinterpret this as nerves due to the fact she has something to hide. The nervousness is making her IBS worse. It's a vicious cycle. More later on...

Hmmmm, so Pat rushed to Ginny's bedside, huh? I can't believe that man had the nerve to show up there. I'm not one to tell tales, but confidentially, between you and me, I heard from Ginny's friend Mary Beth in Billing that Ginny and Pat were having problems. I heard that Ginny found a key to the Golden Goose Motel on Route 7 in the pocket of Pat's flannel shirt. I know what kind of motel that is. Supposedly Ginny followed him there the other night, and saw him go into a room with some skanky looking woman. Ginny was going to confront Pat last night. I wonder if I or Mary Beth should tell the police this.

Look guys I am really sorry about Ginny but can I just remind everyone my vacation with Bob and the kids is scheduled to begin THIS Friday and Ginny was supposed to be my back-up!

Now you know I am a team player but we have been planning this trip to Six Flags for 3 months now and we - that's me, the husband and the kids - have to go!

Little Connor in particular is looking forward to the side trip to the Water Park. My husband even bought a new bathing suit at Sears for this (none of the old ones would fit him anymore). So you see we really need to get a back-up learning my stuff right now! Did I mention I have kids?

It seemed like no one could hear my knocks and screaming. I was supposed to finish a project for Ginny...? Uh, I can't remember her last name. How stupid. What happened to Gert? Ginny is the one we are in crisis mode over. I was so anxious overnight that I hit the "Big 3" - McDonalds, Burger King, and Wendy's - last night. I have been out of the office environment for years and yet these threads still crack me up, not sure why.

Anyway, did you know that Joshua Ferris wrote a book called WHEN WE CAME TO THE END which is all about office life, including stealing red staples and visiting co-workers in the hospital and ordering food for meetings. When I first read the book I was sure that Ferris got his ideas right here in DL! But of course he lives with his wife in Brooklyn (according the the book jacket) so he CAN'T be gay, can he?

Good morning, all. The news on Ginny is not good, I'm afraid. She lapsed into a coma last night after having the contents of her stomach pumped. Because poisoning had been suspected, the doctors decided to pump her stomach, which would bring up anything she ingested over the previous 24 hours. What came up were parts of a chicken & biscuit bowl, three crispy twisters, four apple pie minis, some manicotti formaggio, steak gorgonzola-alfredo, pork filettino, smoked mozzarella fonduta, chicken parmigiana, black tie mousse cake, and torta di chocolate. Tiara in Billing, one of Ginny's BFFs, was at the hospital last night when all this was happening. She told us that the shocked doctor wasn't familiar with any of these items, but that one of his nurses, Nurse Brenda, aka Big Boned Brenda, was. She identified the contents immediately. To confirm this, she waddled over to her computer at the nurses' station, printed out copies of the KFC and Olive Garden menus and handed them to the doctor.

Some of the girls in Editorial, Gina, Bethany, Sheila, and Connie, are going to the hospital this evening. They weren't going to go until Tiara told informed them that Ginny could use some friends around her and that the chicken a la king and the oreo cheese cake in the hospital cafeteria are to die for.

More news later on...

It has come to my attention that Jerri was seen at Target, the Olive Garden and KFC last night. Jerri is supposed to be in the hospital on disability. This is not good and should be taken care of immediately.

Also, Catherine please check to see if a receipt came with the fruit bouquet. Just as a reminder, gifts for Jerri should be planned and paid for off-site. NO petty cash may be used to pay for "Get-Well Gifts"!

And another thing, Catherine...please do not send out group e-mails with discount codes to Mamma Mia at Caesar's in Atlantic City. Please leave the coupons on my desk, and I will give them to Jessica the admin ass't who will have Mr. Fraupecker approve them. One approved, they will be left at the mailboxes for people to enjoy. Let's not forget what happened in June when Ethel sent out a BOGO for Six Flags with a code that expired two years ago!

I am wondering if we should not hold off on a shower for Ginny's surprise twins because there is some confusion about the gender of the babies. One is clearly a boy, but there is a real question about the other baby. Ginny's doctor is encouraging her to raise the baby as a girl. And she is thrilled with that idea because she has always wanted a Ginny Jr.

—Beatrice in Maintenance

reply 219

07/31/2008

Beatrice, I just came from the hospital to visit my very good friend Ginny and you are partially correct about the gender of Ginny's babies. Regretfully, Ginny's babies are conjoined twins attached at the genitals, specifically at the penis. There is one set of testicles that will be given to one of the boys. Ginny would like a Ginny, Jr., but her doctor is suggesting otherwise.

*I'm not supposed to say anything, but there is something "wrong" with the twins. They're not conjoined or anything like that, but the nurses working in maternity go into the nursery area, and run out trying not to vomit.

I've been told not to say anything to anybody, but one of the more religious maternity nurses crawled out of the maternity area backwards, on her knees, playing with her cross necklace, muttering, "Sweet Jesus in Heaven, protect us!"

I'm sure it's something like colic or croup. But that weird green glow from the maternity ward kind of creeps me out.*

Hi all. It's been a harrowing few days at Consolidated. From what we've heard, Ginny is still in a coma after giving birth to twins via caeserian of course. The babies seem to be ok. One of them choked up a Snickers wrapper when the doctor spanked it, but that was the only complication.

She did awake at one point during the day, from what Gina in Editorial told me and the other gals, squeezed her loyal husband Pat's hand and murmured "out." He thought she was trying to get say she wanted to get out of bed to be with her babies, and he responded as such. She shook her head with all her might and murmured with any strength she had left, "Outback" and then lapsed back into a coma. She's currently being fed intravenously. They have mashed baby back ribs coursing through the IV line. Godspeed Ginny.

Meanwhile we have an All About Eve situation at work here. Ginny's protege in Billing, Marlinda, has become very cozy with the head of the department, Mr. McWhorter. I have no doubt that Marlinda is planning on sleeping her way into Ginny's position. We'll have to mobilize against Marlinda in order to preserve Ginny's job.

Marlinda can make all the plans she wants, kiddies, but it won't work. Mr. McWhorter's preferences go in the other direction, if you catch my drift.

Still, it would be humorous to see her try to get him in bed!

Oh everyone. Ix92m so excited and just wanted to share my most extraordinary experience. I spoke to Ginny a few minutes ago, and she wants everyone to know that shex92s fine, happy, and transitioning nicely.

As most of you know, Ix92m a bit psychic, and spent my lunch hour in the park attempting to visit the astral plane. Ix92ve never really been too successful before, but as I centered my chakras and tried to see with my third eye, I felt this tremendous WHOOSH and began to leave my body. (By the way, I saw Kenny in Shipping pee in a corner of the loading dock as I was flying away. Someone might want to talk to his supervisor, Mr. Johnson about his behavior. Itx92s neither professional nor hygienic. Anyway.)

In an instant, I was transported to the most beautiful field of red poppies. In the distance was a glittering city, which I can only describe as heaven. It was green, and sparkling and glistening. Ix92ve never seen anything so beautiful.

I couldnx92t believe I had actually transcended the physical experience and was now in the spiritual plane. As I stood (or more accurately hovered), marveling at the immense beauty of where I was, I heard a voice call out my name.

Riversong!

Riversong!

I looked around and at first didnx92t see anyone, which really didnx92t scare me too much, as I had transported my higher self to another realm, duh. I didnx92t imagine that spirits would have bodies or whatever. But gliding through the poppies came a transparent figure, ghostly and mysterious. I screamed with delight, because I knew it was my beloved Grandmother Iris, who had crossed the year before. With astral tears streaming down my ethereal face, I ran (or, more accurately, hovered) through the poppies crying, x93Gramma! Gramma!x94

I fell prostated at Grammax92s feet, humbled by our blessed reunion.

Trembling, I lifted my eyes to the figure now materializing and thought, x93What the fuck is Ginny from Billing doing here?

Wherex92s Gramma?x94

After Ginny calmed me down (you CAN get majorly P.Ox92ed in the hereafter, it turns out) she told me that she had just died giving birth, that she was happy because she really doesnx92t like kids, and was relieved to get away from Pat, who she said is a complete tool. Her words (or astral thoughts), not mine. She also told me that they have casinos in heaven, and that Gramma was glued to a nickel video slot and can smoke and have all the Bloody Marys her heart desires and would get back to me.

Anyway, Ginny said to say hi to everyone at work, to not get too skeeved out by what you find in her desk, and that she left a note about Mr. Bastenberry and a dead hooker tucked inside a Lean Cuisine in the breakroom freezer. The note, not the hooker, LOL. (A bit of humor from the other side).

By the way, Ginny looked really pretty in heaven. Apparently you can appear anyway you want. Heavenly Ginny has now gone down 12 sizes to an 18. She was wearing the most beautiful dress, but for some reason forgot to re-imagine her calves and ankles. The T-strap shoe didnx92t do much to alleviate the effect. And I wouldnx92t have taken that bouffant to heaven, but thatx92s just me.

Anyway, Ginny hears your prayers and comments, and (for the most part) appreciates everything said about her.

Oh, and she wanted me to single out Brenda in Accounts Receivable, who she said she hated in life, but now has only the most heavenly divine love for. She wanted Brenda to know that she shouldnx92t worry about her husband Malcom cheating on her with that cheap blonde at church, but should keep an eye on that red headed guy from the construction site. I donx92t know what that means. Ix92m not privileged to know all of the wisdom from the great beyond.

And then, suddenly, it began to snow. In heaven of all places. With another tremendous WHOOSH I felt myself pulled from this heavenly fairy land of poppies and glistening green cities, and was plunked back into my body. As I started to come to, I heard, very softly, x93Mrs? Mrs?x94 I was groggy and confused, and had the strangest feeling that Ix92d just had sex as my privates were tingly (sorry to be so graphic). That must be a side effect of successful astral projection. I didnx92t have to worry. One of the grounds keepers in the park, Luis, saw my eternal soul begin to leave my body and threw himself on top of me to try and keep me from flying away into the ether. He is both kind, and gifted.

Ix92m going to try an astral projection tomorrow at lunch, and Ix92d love if some of you would join me. Ix92ll leave an astral projection sign-up list with Marla the new receptionist tomorrow morning.

Namashday, everyone! (Thatx92s Buddish for Blessed Be You!)

Corporate Memorandum URGENT**

Corporate has just informed me of their decision to outsource our Billing Department to a more qualified (and frankly cheaper) staff in Bangladesh. Quite honestly, Mr McWhorter thinks this decision was long overdue, the Billing Department has been inefficient for the past year (AR has been picking up most of the slack) using resources better spent on expanding the development and marketing of new products. There will be a meeting commencing at 9 am Monday morning to discuss severance. There will be also be a government official on hand to discuss options for social assistance for those employees who were not on the Benefits plan. All persons employed in the Billing Department will have until 12 noon to empty their desks. Please be sure to take all belongings as the Janitorial staff will be disposing of any items left behind at 4 pm.

From the desk of Mr. McWhorter.

I'm Ginny's replacement in Billing, and I got her desk. I can't tell you how many hours I had to scrub and disinfect this cubicle--it was disgusting! Leftover chicken bones in the bottom drawer, potato chip crumbs everywhere, stale donut holes, and sticky rings and puddles where she had spilled soda. Dr. Pepper, from the smell of it.

There's a picture on the wall of some guy--or is that a woman? I can't really tell--and she's written "Me 'n' Pat at Cracker Barrel" on the bottom. Anyone know who this Pat is, and would he/she like the photo? There's nothing else left of any value. Clearly the office vultures had gone through her leavings pretty thoroughly.

I know she's dead, but on my Momma's grave I know it was Ginny and that she isn't really dead.

Normally, I question everything I do or think, but what got me thinking that it was Ginny was someone screaming, "C'mon Ginny. You're dead! More ice cream ain't gonna kill you at this point."

I might be mistaken, but it sure looked like her. But I could be mistaken. In fact, I'm sure I'm wrong.
